From the desk of the Chief

Last year at this time I was sworn in as the 49th president of the California Police Chiefs Association (Cal Chiefs). It is hard to believe that a year has already gone by.

On Wednesday, February 25, 2015 in Riverside, California (during Cal Chiefs' annual conference), I handed the gavel off to Chula Vista Police Chief David Bejarano. It was an honor to have proudly represented the city of Citrus Heights and to serve the police chiefs of our great state. I appreciate the unique opportunity it provided to do some of the most meaningful, rewarding work of my career to date.

We began the year continuing to navigate the challenges we faced coming out of a very difficult recession as well as the fallout from prison realignment. Then, unexpectedly, the events in Ferguson and New York unfolded. Later, Proposition 47 passed converting certain offenses from felonies to misdemeanors. Law enforcement is a fluid business; it moves quickly, changes hourly – we are familiar with the pace. Recognizing the need to redirect our efforts, the association stepped up in a big way, coming together to implement progressive leadership around these critical emerging issues.

CPCA realized a number of goals this past year including strengthening our voice in the capitol (where our most significant challenges lie), enhancing our legislative team, continued funding allocated by the governor to law enforcement, and proactively confronting and responding to the sometimes polarizing issues our profession faces. We worked hard to identify and respond to specific concerns as brought forward by our membership. We strategically managed bills and legislative matters to ensure the safest, best possible outcomes for law enforcement as well as the communities we serve.

I have long been an advocate of strong public safety through community policing, actively fostering safer communities by forging solid relationships and working collaboratively with political leadership, the business community, educational leaders, and neighborhood stakeholders. The platform Cal Chiefs afforded me greatly enhanced my relationships statewide, strengthened my ties in the capitol, created valuable partnerships where none previously existed, and allowed me the opportunity to establish a personal rapport with the Governor and his staff. These ancillary facets of my presidency will carry over, allowing me to better and more comprehensively serve the city of Citrus Heights.

I am very proud of our exceptional profession and the tireless efforts of police chiefs throughout California who continually endeavor to strengthen and enhance our industry. The progress Cal Chiefs made this past year set the course for moving forward in 2015; I can assure you we are on very solid ground. Our mission and work are of the highest calling and I remain fully committed to forwarding the cause and objectives of this noble organization and its distinguished members.

History and Arts

More Hidden Treasures Exhibit a Success

In February Citrus Heights residents were able to get up close with the City's permanent art collection and historical archives from the City and San Juan Unified School District's collections. Attendees also got a chance to view artwork by Ed Chaney, a Citrus Heights resident and artist, and sculptor Bill Mang. History and Arts Commission exhibit was the second event of its kind at Sunrise Mall. The event featured the City's expanded art collection, which now features more than 40 works of art including photographs, paintings and prints by Citrus Heights and Sacramento region artists. Artifacts from the school district included a historic cheerleader's uniform, dance cards and a year book from 1925. To receive updates on future History and Arts Commission projects, visit the City's website at www.citrusheights.net and sign up for the "Notify Me" feature. For more information call 916-725-2448.
